

LAST WEEK IN INNOVATIVE MOBILITY

October 26th - November 1, 2015

VEHICLES

Honda unveils a two-passenger standing automated vehicle at the Tokyo Motor Show. The Wanderstand concept is intended to provide an on-demand transportation experience in which the passenger is in the same line of sight as a pedestrian.

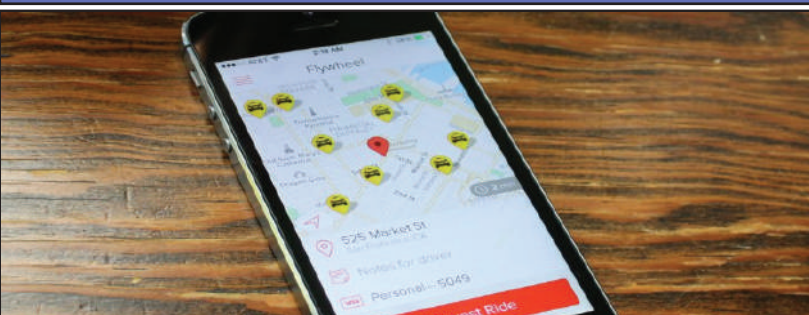

TNCS/RIDESOURCING

UberPOOL launches in Washington DC, the sixth American city to feature the ridesplitting service. UberPOOL will be in competition with Split, which has been operating a similar service in the DC area since May 2015.

TNCS/RIDESOURCING

Flywheel launches a pilot program for its TaxiOS Android app with the San Francisco Municipal Transportation Agency, which features GPS-based rates, mobile dispatch, and mobile-based payments. The TaxiOS pilot aims to update current fare metering technology in select San Francisco taxis.

CARSHARING

The Marion County auditor files a lawsuit against the city of Indianapolis over its construction contract with the electric carsharing service BlueIndy, claiming that the city illegally paid the company $6 million.

CARSHARING

With California's Zero Emission Vehicle Program set to expire in 2018, a UC Berkeley study reveals positive impacts of EVs and PHVs in carsharing fleets in the US. Carsharing was found to expand the demographic profile exposed to EVs and PHVs as well as increase desire to purchase these vehicles in the future.

Visit imr.berkeley.edu to sign up for our weekly newsletters!
Follow us on Twitter @InnovMobility

Innovative Mobility Research (IMR) is based at the Transportation Sustainability Research Center (TSRC) at the University of California, Berkeley

